ABOUT THE SEMINAR

Research is the scientific field of study to examine various learning processes, human attributes, interactions, organizations and institutions to reshape the outcomes. In social science research, the practical constraints occur in choosing the appropriate research setting, the locality, sample, measurement techniques, research models, models for gathering the data and analytical techniques. Especially research scholars/ educators usually prefer to follow quantitative rather than qualitative and mixed methods. In a nutshell, quantitative research generates numerical data whereas qualitative research on the other hand generates the data otherway around. Qualitative research is considered to be particularly suitable for gaining an indepth understanding of underlying reasons and largely depends on skills and rigor of the researchers. Both the methods differ fundamentally but their applications overlap in many ways. The present seminar is aimed at addressing these issues.

OBJECTIVES OF THE SEMINAR

- The main objective of the Seminar is to
- ❖ Outline the qualitative and quantitative paradigms
 - ❖ Illustrate the distinctiveness of each paradigm
 - ❖ Illustrate the similarity between each paradigm
 - ❖ Outline the ways in which qualitative and quantitative methods can be combined
 - ❖ Apply mixed research to individual method projects
